

Now is the Time

The COVID-19 virus has devastated our world like no other disease to date. Lives have been lost. Hearts have been broken. Families changed forever. But what does this sickness have in common with the right to life issues? A sudden spotlight has been put on the value of lives lost to COVID within the past two years. The world is enraged because innocent lives are being uncontrollably lost by the thousands. This same tragedy of loss of life is happening each day but on an even larger scale for the millions of pre-born babies that are terminated each year. The difference is that we have a choice and voice over the last one. For all life has the same value, no matter the age of the lost or the cause of death. We have the ability to make a change for those that have no voice. Now is the time.

We wear masks in public. We wash our hands constantly. We reapply and reapply hand sanitizer, in hopes of killing the germs. These are just a few precautions individuals take today in order to protect vulnerable people from the spread of Covid-19. What would happen if we took that same attitude and focused it towards the protection of the unborn? People would start advocating for life – all life -- and begin standing up for those who can't defend themselves. Just like we have changed our daily life due to COVID, we can make this same change in the battle for right to life. Abortion is also a deadly disease that has taken hold of this world by disguising itself as a solution for women, when in reality it is the worst possible answer for all humanity. It is never too late for change, and now more than ever, we see that we need to protect not just those most likely to get sick from a virus, but for those most likely to lose their over inconvenience. Now is the time.

With every life that is lost to Covid-19, we gain a deeper value for just how important life itself is. Now is the time to speak up for all of those who need to be protected. All life should be valued and should never be discarded, underestimated, or undervalued. All around the world, abortions are happening every moment and with it, a chance to live is gone forever. If this pandemic teaches our country anything, it should be that all life has the same value, healthy or sick, born or unborn. Now is the time to make a change in what and who we value.
